December 2022 Fund Update

In December, the Fund fell 4.13% (after fees). This compares to a decrease of 3.21% for the S&P/ASX200 and a fall of 3.73% for the Small Ords. The relative performance of the portfolio this month was hampered by a lack of exposure to the gold and REIT sectors, which rose strongly.

There was no company announced bad news for any of our larger holdings, but a few of them fell by double digit amounts regardless, in the weak market. On the other hand we did benefit from our shorts in Lithium producers.

2022 was a very tough year for investors, with central banks rapidly increasing interest rates in response to their concerns over inflation. Near the start of the year we wrote that higher growth stocks, small caps and low liquidity stocks tend to underperform with such conditions. This proved to be truer than we hoped, as reflected in the one year total return of the Small Ordinaries being negative 18.4%.

We continued to see bad news regarding the consumer in December, which has led us to pre-emptively trim by a further third our holdings in retailers. It's not that we think our companies are doing poorly, they are outstanding businesses, but the combination of reasonably high valuations and emergent earnings headwinds indicate attractive entry points remain further on the horizon.

Right now the market headwind for the retail sector is very strong. Indeed during the year we managed to make investors' money at times by shorting retail stocks when we could find businesses that also had their own specific problems.

Recently we have also profitably shorted Lithium producers. See below for more details on this.

The selling from trimming our holdings and adding shorts has continued to increase the proportion of net cash held in the portfolio which now stands at 40%, which is towards the top of our usual range. It is also indicative that compelling long investments, at attractive valuations, are currently harder to find than usual.

This reduces our exposure to further falls in the market and leaves us well positioned to take advantage of the inevitable re-emergence of mispriced opportunities.

The boom in Lithium prices has given us the opportunity for what we expect will be a relatively briefly held short in Lithium producers.

Over the course of 2022 the spot price of Lithium surged well ahead of any sort of reasonable medium to long term sustainable level, given how quickly projects can get up. This can be seen from the broker forecasts, where they expect dramatic price falls over the next few years.

The rising Lithium price has also been dragging up the share prices of Lithium producers. We have been diligently waiting for the first signs of weakness in the Lithium price. It was our expectation that a falling Lithium price would stall the desire of investors to buy Lithium producer shares, which would result in very significant share price falls.

We took a cautious approach, which has paid off. Putting on a small short when recently the price of Lithium at an auction fell, and then building on the short as the price continued to fall in subsequent days and weeks. Our shorting position is still not large, and it was not all put on at the peak in their stock prices, but at the end of December we are up over 10% on average on these short positions. We will look to close these shorts out as the price of Lithium stabilises.
